"The Gentleman from Indiana"

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS
REWARD

This column offers three prizes of fifty, thirty and twenty dollars for the best answers to the following question:

In the long run, are dictatorships more efficient than republics?

Limit your answer to two hundred words. Mail it within one week after this column appears to Samuel B. Pettengill, Shoreham Bldg., Washington, D. C.

This contest is open to the rank and file American, to all except lawyers, teachers, professors, economists and professional writers. The names of the winners will appear in the first column published in February, together with excerpts from the winning answers. At a later time I shall submit another question with like prizes. And so on for several months, perhaps through the year.

There is no catch whatever in this. It is on the up and up. There will be no trick questions.

This is my own idea. No one suggested it. But, of course, there is a reason. In fact, two reasons.

First, for my own information I want to know how well certain basic facts are understood. Facts which lie at the very foundation of our system of government and social and economic structure. I want to know how well or how poorly our public schools have contributed to that understanding. I want to know what high school boys and girls, workers, farmers and housewives are thinking.

Second, it is my hope that this column will encourage newspapers, luncheon clubs, veterans and patriotic organizations all over this country to stimulate searches for truth and common understanding of our common problems. I am certain it is needed.

I will tell how I came to do this. Three months ago I was talking with a friend of mine. He said, "Every office building, railroad, factory, farm, store, and home in America is held in the hollow of the hand of the 'mass man.' He can crush the whole system like an egg shell. Or he can guard it against the world."

"We spend millions to advertise the things this system produces automobiles, radios, ginger ale, motion pictures, butter and bread. We spend more millions to insure our factories and farms against fire, wind, storm, embezzlement, credit losses, etc. But what are we doing to advertise the system itself? And what insurance are we taking out on the foundations upon which the whole structure rests—the understanding of the millions who have the power and the votes to insure or destroy?"

"We endow colleges and pay taxes to support the public schools. But what are the colleges and schools teaching? And how many go to college or finish high school?"

"But this system of free government and free enterprise is in peril. It has vanished in Russia, Germany, Italy. It is going up in flames elsewhere. And sparks are flying across the Atlantic."

"Business men and investors, of course, want to save it. But there are hundreds of labor leaders who also want to save it, men who think as did old Sam Gompers. They are struggling against men in their own ranks who think they want to scrap the works. What help are they getting?"

"We get all heated up once in 4 years when a political campaign is on. Democrats and Republicans alike, we blow in millions in six weeks time to 'educate the voter.' Most of these millions are wasted. And then we sit on our hands for another four years and do nothing but groan."

"In 1787 some men decided to try to sell constitutional government to our forefathers. They wrote the Federalist Papers. And for two years these men and their friends argued the question in every city and hamlet and hearthside in the thirteen original states. Not to win a political campaign. Not to elect anybody to the pay roll. Just to bring a strong free government to birth."

"That's all. But it was the most successful advertising campaign this world knew until Karl Marx and Hitler and Stalin started another to attack their work and destroy it."

"But that was 153 years ago. It's like advertising Ivory Soap once in a century and a half. Is it any wonder people are buying other goods? Everybody is busy doing everything else except to look after the biggest business in the world today—and the most important to him and his boys and girls—the United States of America."

"I understand," he concluded, "that a stone has been erected over the grave of the French Republic. There are two words on it 'Too Late.'"

And that is the reason I am asking these questions and offering these prizes. I want to do my bit for the country that gave me my

To Float $10,000
Bond Issue For Fire Equipment

Plans are underway to float a $10,000 at a special election in the township of New Lenox sometime this month for the purpose of raising funds with which to purchase a lot, build a fire department house and purchase a fire truck for the newly created New Lenox Township Fire District. At a special election held last fall, special taxes were voted for the fire district, but the taxes will not be forthcoming for a year, so in order to get the fire district under way it was deemed most expedient to float the bond issue and retire the bonds from the special taxes voted.

It is proposed to build the new fire department headquarters large enough to accommodate two fire trucks and a meeting place for the fire department.

No definite location for the fire house has been decided on as yet.

R. I. Shows Big
Revenue Increase

Rock Island Lines income figures for November, released December 27th by E. M. Durham, Jr., Chief Executive Officer, show the largest gross revenues and net railway operating income for that month since 1930. Total gross for November, 1940, was $6,642,748, which is an increase of $172,863 as compared with $6,469,882 for November 1939. Net railway operating income for the month this year was $760,925, as compared with $563,802 for the month last year, or an increase this year of $197,123.

Total gross revenues for the 11 months period ended with November amount to $73,789,233, which is an increase of $1,574,663 over the gross of $72,214,570 for the 11 months last year. Net railway operating income for the period this year aggregates $6,900,643, as compared with $4,861,820 last year, an increase this year of $2,038,822 or 42 per cent.

The larger increase in net railway operating income than in gross revenues, is attributed to increased efficiency in operating performances resulting from modernization and improvements to road and equipment.

EDITORIAL Why War?

A year of war and of trouble the world over has passed into history. Untold suffering, death and destruction of billions of dollars worth of property has been the result of man's greed, stupidity and lust for power and his disregard of the Bible. Man has forsaken all higher and nobler things of life and has left God out of the picture.

The forces of evil are rampant thruout the world and the very furies of hell itself have been let loose. Lies, greed, lust for power, rapine, murder and ruthlessness have been going hand in hand and after a year of this kind of a program what has man or the world gained?

War never settled anything and only leaves seeds for future wars. The vanquished foe nurses a feeling of revenge and after he regains his strength another war follows.

The common people the world over have it in their power to end war forever. If every man would refuse to bear arms and would not serve in any army or navy, there would be no war. The rulers and war mongers would not wage war as they are too yellow for that. But so long as the common man is willing to offer himself as a target to be shot at and to do all the dirty work, we will have wars.

The thought that war is murder and that every man who bears arms is a legalized murderer should be preached thruout the world and make man realize how foolish it is for him to kill another human being whom he has never seen before and who has never harmed him any harm.

Instead of our churches sending missionaries to foreign fields to convert the heathen they would perform far greater service if they would send missionaries to the so called "Christian" nations and spread the idea among all men that as soldiers they are only the pawns of a small minority of greedy, selfish, lustful men, to whom life is meaningless. Man should be made to see the foolishness and folly of killing off innocent women, children, the aged and sick. The Bible teaches "Thou shalt not kill" and does not say it is legal to kill in war time.

Hate can be made to serve a good purpose, if man was taught to hate war and refuse to bear arms. Man should be taught how foolish and futile war is and his slogan should be "Down with war forever".

All this may sound like a fanciful dream, but the day may come when man will fulfill Biblical prophecy by beating his war implements into plow shares and pruning hooks, the implements of peace.

Let us work to get this idea started in 1941. If man wills to do this he can. Just stop and think how much good could have been accomplished in the world with the wealth which has been wasted in the present war.

One of the largest rural Will County athletic projects ever undertaken, will soon be under way when A. W. Walsh of New Lenox begins work on a $12,000 bowling alley which he will locate in the old Colonial hall. Six National alleys are to be installed. A concrete floor is to be laid and the entire enterprise will be up-to-date in every manner.

The new alley will undoubtedly be well patronized by bowling teams from neighboring towns as well as New Lenox. At present teams from Mokena and Frankfort play at Homewood. At present New Lenox has over one hundred men and women bowlers who bowl at Joliet.

Mr. Walsh will also operate a refreshment stand in connection with the bowling alley which may open in a month or six weeks.

Build Addition To New Lenox P. O.

A steadily increasing business has made it necessary for Ellis J. O'Daniel, New Lenox druggist and post master to expand his place of business. Two wings, one to the east, the other to the west of the old building are under construction.

The post office will be located in the new east wing and the ice cream parlor in the west wing, while the drug department will be placed in the space made available by the removal of the post office and ice cream parlor to the new quarters.

Mr. O'Daniel is one of the most progressive business men in New Lenox as his constantly expanding business attests.

A Recently-Published Diary Sheds New Light on Romantic Story of Fur Trade In the Rocky Mountains a Century Ago

The Grand Parade of the Assembled Indians at the Fur Traders' Rendezvous in the Rocky Mountains in 1837. From the painting by Alfred J. Miller of Baltimore, who accompanied Sir William Drummond Stuart (or Stewart) of Murthly Castle, Scotland, to the Far West in 1837. This picture hung in Murthly Castle until about 1926 when it, and other paintings by Miller, were sold and sent to New York. It was purchased there by E. W. Marland, then governor of Oklahoma, and presented to the Oklahoma Historical society in 1936.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

THE romantic era of the Rocky mountain fur trade of a century ago came to life again the other day and once more such frontier notables as Old Jim Bridger, Kit Carson, Nathaniel J. Wyeth, Jim Beckwith, Captain Bonneville, Lucien Fontenelle and the Robidoux brothers strode across the stage of history. They appeared in a new book—"Life in the Rocky Mountains—A Diary of Wanderings on the Sources of the Rivers Missouri, Columbia, and Colorado, from February, 1830, to November, 1835, by W. A. Ferris, then in the Employ of the American Fur Company," edited by Paul C. Phillips and published by Fred A. Rosenstock—the Old West Publishing company of Denver, Colo.

"Life in the Rocky Mountains" is referred to in the foregoing as a "new book." Perhaps "rediscovered narrative" would be a more accurate description. For after Ferris' "wanderings on the sources of the rivers etc." were over, the diary which he had carefully kept was rewritten as a continuous narrative and published serially in an early American magazine, the Western Literary Messenger of Buffalo, N. Y., in 1843-44.

In this form it was known to a few scholars of the fur trade era but there were many gaps in the narrative because the Messenger ceased publication early in its career and many numbers had apparently been lost. Then Mr. Rosenstock, who had been collecting copies of this magazine, traced down the missing numbers and made them available to Mr. Phillips, who had already started work on a biography of Ferris.

Later research unearthed other important material—family papers, articles written by Ferris in his later years for the Dallas (Texas) Herald and, most important of all, a map of the Northwest Fur Country, drawn by Ferris about 1836. All of this material has gone into the making of this "new book" which is rated by historians as constituting one of the great "finds" in recent research in the history of the West.

Ferris was born in Glens Falls, N. Y., December 26, 1810, and grew up in Buffalo, to which his family had moved when he was very young. He was trained to be a surveyor but at the age of 18 he ran away from home because his mother disapproved of his smoking a pipe and scolded him severely for doing it on the street one day. Feeling the urge to "go West," he finally arrived in St. Louis in June, 1829, and entered the employ of Pierre Chouteau Jr., head of the Western department of John Jacob Astor's American Fur company.

At that time three great companies were competing for the control of the fur business in the West. Into this struggle the young New Yorker was plunged when he left St. Louis with an A. F. C. company in February, 1830, and went up the Platte river, through South Pass into the Green river country.

That fall they trapped the western tributaries of the Green and later moved over to the neighborhood of Great Salt Lake. In 1831 Ferris was with a trapping party on the upper Snake river and there had difficulty with a band of rival Hudson's Bay trappers. That summer he crossed the Continental Divide into the valley of the Jefferson then continued north into the valley of Clark's Fork of the Columbia.

The next spring Ferris returned to the Snake river country, was made a clerk and sent among the Flathead Indians with orders to bring them to the annual trappers' rendezvous at Pierre's Hole. He returned with the Flatheads in time to take part in the famous Battle of Pierre's Hole in July, 1832. That fall he was in another famous frontier fight in which his leader, William H. Vandenberg, lost his life.

Ferris tells a dramatic story of this incident—how the party of seven trappers came upon traces of an Indian hunting party and how they cautiously approached a little grove of trees "watching each wavering twig and rustling bough, to catch a glimpse of some skulking savage." Then:

"Suddenly the lightning and thunder of at least twenty fusils burst upon our astonished senses from the gully, and awoke us to a startling consciousness of imminent danger, magnified beyond conception, by the almost magical appearance of more than one hundred warriors, erect in uncompromising enmity—both before and on either side of us, at the terrifying distance (since measured) of thirty steps. Imagination can not paint the horror of the scene. A thousand brilliant reflections from their guns as they were quickly thrown into various positions, either to load or fire, succeeded the first volley, which was followed by a rapid succession of shots, and the leaden messengers of death, whistled in our ears as they passed in unwelcome proximity.

At that instant I saw three of our comrades flying, like arrows, from the place of murder. The horse of our partisan (Vandenberg) was shot dead under him, but with unexampled firmness, he stepped calmly from the lifeless animal, presented his gun at the advancing foe, and exclaimed "Boys, don't run"; at the same moment the wounded horse of a Frenchman threw his rider, and broke away towards camp. The yells of these infernal fiends filled the air, and death appeared inevitable, when I was aroused to energy by observing about twenty Indians advancing, to close the already narrow passage, between the two lines of warriors.

Dashing my spurs rowel deep into the flank of my noble steed, at a single bound he cleared the ditch, but before he reached the ground, I was struck in the left shoulder by a ball, which nearly threw me off; by a desperate effort, however, I regained my upright position, and fled. A friend, Mr. R. C. Nelson, crossed the gully with me, but a moment after he was called to return. Without considering the utter impossibility of rendering assistance to our devoted partisan, he wheeled, but at the same instant his horse was severely wounded by two balls through the neck, which compelled him to fly; yet he kept his eye for some moments on our friend, who seeing himself surrounded, without the possibility of escape, leveled his gun and shot down the foremost of his foes. The Indians immediately fired a volley upon him—he fell—they uttered a loud and shrill yell of exultation, and the noble spirit of a good and a brave man had passed away, forever.

Thus fell Wm. Henry Vandenberg, a gentleman born in Indiana, educated at West Point in the Military Academy, and, at the time he perished, under thirty years of age. Bold, daring and fearless, yet cautious, deliberate and prudent; uniting the apparent opposite qualities, of courage and coolness, a soldier and a scholar, he died universally beloved and regretted by all who knew him.

Ferris had many other narrow escapes from death during the remainder of his service with the American Fur company. Concerning his career in the Rockies, Phillips writes:

"The five and a half years which Warren Ferris passed in the mountains had done much to broaden his experience and develop his powers. He had served under such great masters of the fur trade as Andrew Drips, Lucien Fontenelle, Joseph Robidoux, and William Henry Vandenberg; and his acquaintance with them in the small trading and trapping parties must have been intimate. He also met Jim Bridger, Thomas Fitzpatrick, Robert Campbell, Henry Fraeb, William and Milton Sublette, and other leaders of the opposition and learned of their ways and abilities. He knew Bonneville, Nathaniel P. Wyeth, Captain John Ghand and other independent traders. Another man whom he met, and evidently greatly admired but does not mention in his narrative, was Sir William Drummond Stuart, the famous English explorer and hunter.

THE DEATH OF VANDENBURGH
From the painting by Irvin Shope, now in the Montana State University Library. A reproduction of this picture forms the frontispiece in "Life in the Rocky Mountains."

Seated with such men by the campfire, or traveling the trail with them, must have given the young man a larger view of the world as well as a better knowledge of the problems of how to deal with Indians. . . . The care with which he made his observations, and the honest and vividness with which he portrayed them, make his narrative one of absorbing interest. It is the only source of information regarding many important events in the savage struggle for control of the fur trade."

But aside from Ferris' importance as a first-hand chronicler of this important era in American history, he has other claims to fame. He left the mountains in the winter of 1835 and returned to his home in Buffalo to straighten out a family tangle. One of his brothers had gone to Texas and the next year Warren Ferris joined him there. He became a surveyor in the service of the new Republic of Texas and it was he who made the surveys for the town which became the great city of Dallas.

Next he settled down as a farmer but took no part in the Civil war both because he was over age for service and because of his crippled shoulder received in the fight with the Indians in which Vandenberg was killed. His later years were devoted to literary work and he died on February 8, 1873.

British bombers' damage to German war production greater than reported . . . Irish refuse to aid Britain, emphasize necessity of strict neutrality.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—The two most encouraging phases of the war, from the standpoint of hoping that Britain holds out, are that Germany is suffering a great deal more in damage to her own war production than any dispatches have indicated, and that the Italian fiasco in Greece has postponed a successful attack on Egypt and Suez until next winter.

British production of airplanes has been badly hurt by the German air raids, but imports from the United States now amount to slightly above 300 fighters and bombers a month. This is behind schedule, incidentally. United States production of all classes of planes is about 200 a month behind schedule.

But the number of combat planes is now actually above 300 each month, and this number is being slowly increased each month. Sometime in early summer, assuming Britain holds out, there will be a sharp increase in production. A little later, depending entirely on how rapidly the Detroit group of automobile people get into actual production, there will be another sharp rise.

OUTLOOK IS ENCOURAGING

It is all a question of whether Britain can take it until quantity deliveries begin. Information in diplomatic circles here now is more encouraging on that than at any time in the last six months, and this despite the bad news about the damage to plants in Britain.

While President Roosevelt talks about our own national defense needing one-half of our production of planes, actually practically all the fighting planes are being sent to Britain. This is not as one-sided as it sounds. Our army and navy want training planes for student pilots far more than they want fighting planes. This situation is likely to continue for some time to come.

But while Germany's production of planes has been cut down as a result of British bombing, according to confidential reports received here, the Nazi losses have not been heavy in the last couple of months. Had they continued the mass raids they began in early September, according to at least one observer, they would have won the war in a month. But there is another side of that picture. Had their losses continued at the rate of 200 a day, they might have lost their air superiority before they won the war.

SUBMARINE BASE UNLIKELY

The government of Eire is very inquisitive about the source of the information of one of the military experts who writes a newspaper column, and who recently asserted that he "knew" the Germans were using Galway as a base for submarine operations.

The Dublin government contends that the Germans could not possibly use any Irish base without everybody knowing about it. In particular, officials of the Irish government insist, the topography around Galway is such that a canoe could not enter and leave the harbor without a lot of people seeing it and wondering whose canoe it was.

Incidentally, it is represented that the Irish living in Ireland, or Eire as they insist upon calling it, are much more friendly to the British today than the third and fourth generations of Irish living in the United States.

There has been no such mellowing of feeling on the part of the American Irish as has transformed the Irish back in the home country since Eire has been a separate nation. Britain is Eire's best customer, particularly for the huge supplies of foodstuffs that the Irish produce.

DENY BASES TO BRITAIN

In fact the only thorn among the roses, until quite recently, was the fact that the South Irish still wanted to take over Ulster. Lately there has been concern about Winston Churchill's statement indicating that Britain needed Irish ports for bases.

On this, the position of the Dublin government is as the ancient law of the Medes and Persians. Nothing doing. The Irish would fight "anybody," it is asserted, who attempted to occupy any of their soil. As they see it, the moment Britain occupied any of their ports or bases their entire country would be subject to German bombing. They point out that they do not have adequate defenses against bombing. Even Britain, which has lots of defenses, is not able to prevent the bombers doing a great deal of damage, they insist, whereas Eire has virtually no defenses.

There is a very keen realization in Eire of their defenseless condition against an attack in force by either of the belligerents. All they could hope to do, they think, is to resort to guerilla warfare.

Peptic Ulcer Benefited by Calm Outlook

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

FOR many years it was believed that ulcer of the stomach (gastric) and ulcer of the duodenum (duodenal) were due to infected teeth and tonsils. Most physicians still believe that infection is a big factor in causing stomach and intestinal (peptic ulcer) in that infection affects the lining wall and it loses its power of warding off the ulcer.

However, it is becoming more and more apparent that the personality of the individual and his physique or build are more important factors in causing peptic ulcers. Thus, as mentioned before, there is the answer of the surgeon to the patient's question:

"Now you have operated, I'll have no more trouble with stomach ulcer, will I?"

The surgeon's reply was: "You will not likely have any more trouble with that ulcer, but you may continue to grow more ulcers if you do not learn to keep calm."

Food Habits Should Be Studied.

As many physicians and surgeons have been stating that infection and other conditions are mostly responsible for peptic ulcers, Drs. E. J. Callahan and D. W. Ingham, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in American Journal of Digestive Diseases, state:

"Despite the criticism against the nervous and emotional cause of peptic ulcer, it is yet the most constant factor in causing the condition. The food habits of a patient with ulcer must be carefully studied, as a well arranged, nonirritating, low residue diet (not much roughage or cellulose as found in bulky foods such as cabbage) is the foundation on which treatment is built."

To help their patients to understand the cause of peptic ulcer, these physicians show an equal sided triangle, one side representing the heredity factor which, of course, the patient can't correct, one side showing nervousness, illness in the family, financial or other worries as a cause, and the third side showing rough or unsuitable foods as another ulcer cause.

The thought then is that if peptic ulcer is present or there is a tendency to ulcer, treatment means the removal of any infection present, acquiring calmness of spirit and the eating of nonirritating foods.

Extract of Ovary In Widening Role

A GLAND extract that is coming more and more into everyday use is extract of the ovaries. It has been a real blessing to women approaching, at, and following the menopause. It "steadies" or quiets the nerves so that many patients are spared the necessity of mental treatment in an institution, relieves shock, and lessens the number and severity of hot flushes or flashes.

Dr. I. H. Blaisdell, Boston, reports excellent results in the treatment of 60 cases of dry catarrh with the very disagreeable odor, by use of a spray of ovary extract (estrin) into the nose. The dry crusts causing the odor disappeared in all 30 cases where onset of catarrh occurred after age of 20, and in 84 per cent of the 30 cases which occurred before the age of 20.

For Catarrh Deafness.

Excellent results have also been obtained in chronic catarrhal deafness by use of ovary extract, also used in the form of a spray into the nose. "Because of the wide variety of its effects on the body, it seems possible that estrin, properly used, may be of value in combating disease and disorders which have been heretofore obscure. The action of estrin is more far-reaching than insulin and more powerful than adrenalin."

Just how estrin acts on the nose is not at present known.

If, then, extract of ovary has shown itself to give great relief from symptoms at menopause in the treatment of that distressing ailment—the dry form of catarrh, and also in catarrhal deafness, do not hesitate to use it in any form prescribed by your physician for other obscure or persistent disturbances of your body.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—What is the best method for removing superfluous hair?

A.—Best method known at present for removing superfluous hair is by electrolysis. And this means of hair removal is absolutely safe. By this method each hair root is individually killed. Your own physician can refer you to an electrolysis expert—not necessarily a physician; or you can apply to the physiotherapy department of your nearest hospital.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

THE STORY THUS FAR

Virgie Morgan, widow, and owner of the Morgan paper mill in the Carolina mountain district, turns down a marriage proposal from Wallace Withers. He leaves in a rage. Branford Wills, a young stranger, who has been lost in the mountains for three days, finds his way to the Morgan home. He is fed and allowed to remain overnight. He identifies himself as a government employee, working with surveyors in the district. Wills develops pneumonia and is forced to remain in the household. Marian, Virgie's daughter, dislikes Wills. Trouble is developing as Withers meets Stanley Daniels, the mill's chemist. Virgie learns someone is attempting to obtain title to timber lands owned by Tom Pruitt, life-long friend of her deceased husband and part owner of the mill. She advises Tom to clear up title to his property. A love affair is developing between Daniels and Lucy Fields, Virgie's secretary. Withers attempts to bargain with Daniels to have him help in getting possession of the Morgan mill. Daniels refuses. Wills improves, and discovers he is in love with Marian. She is developing similar symptoms. Both keep it secret. Virgie offers Wills a job at the mill. Tom learns timber interests have sent men to look over his land. He takes a rifle and goes into the woods. His health greatly improved, Wills leaves the Morgan household to live in the village.

The clerk rang the register and counted out some bills.

"If your mother wants to see Perry Bennett about that piece of spruce of his, Marian," he said, "you tell her it ain't any use. Perry's sold it—they drew the papers Saturday. He sold it to Wallace Withers."

"What would Wallace Withers want with that spruce?"

"Don't ask me. Maybe he's going to sell Christmas trees. Whatever he wants—there's money in it. That old guy is so stingy he honed a nickel razor-blade and used it over and over for ten years."

Marian followed Bry out to his car. She was quiet and thoughtful as Bry tore through town and around the mountain curves. She knew a great deal about her mother's affairs. She was certain that Virgie had counted on buying Perry Bennett's spruce.

"What are we supposed to do when we get to Asheville?" Bry broke in on her silence. "We aren't eloping, by any chance?"

"In a rain-coat?" Marian gave him a pitying look. "When I elope it will be by moonlight, and the man will be lean and handsome. He won't look like you."

"What does it matter how he looks in the moonlight?"

"It doesn't matter. But it matters a lot when I look at him next day and discover what I've eloped with. And I wouldn't be thrilled at looking at you across a breakfast table, Bry, for years and years."

"I never get up for breakfast."

"The man I elope with has to get up. He'll bring me my toast and coffee, with a rosebud on the tray."

"You can't marry that fellow. He's married already. No weak-minded, angelic sap like that could possibly have escaped until now."

"It isn't weak to be gallant," Marian was abstracted because she had been trying to picture Bry across a breakfast table. His dampish hair and eyes full of things he had seen—things you didn't like to think about.

"Gallant and goofy," Bry finished for her. "Your forefathers hitched their women to the plow along with the ox. If they didn't pull a straight furrow they got the whip around their legs. I'll bet your great-grandfather sat by the fire in Scotland and smoked while his wife did the milking and brought in the wood."

"They didn't burn wood in Scotland. They burned peat."

"Well, whatever it was she had to carry it in. You're soft—all you women!"

"You," Marian stated, dryly, "aren't so hard yourself. If this car stalled in the mud right now, I've got more muscle to push it out than you have."

"I don't need muscle." He was complacent. "I've got brains. I know enough to give you good advice while you were pushing the car out."

"You make me sick with your conceit. I don't know why I came with you anyway. Turn around—I want to go back."

"Okay." He turned the car into a drive, without protest, backed it, and turned it, not looking at her.

CHAPTER VII

Virgie had spiked her old hat on the hook and given a flick across her desk with a feather duster, when Branford Wills walked into the office that afternoon.

"I made it." He grinned feebly. "I won't be an important asset to the pulp business for a day or two—not till my knees stop knocking together, anyway. But here I am."

Virgie grinned back. She liked this lean, clear-eyed young man with the trace of iron in the set of his mouth and chin. And she needed him. Days had passed and still Tom Pruitt had not come back. "Well," she said aloud to Wills, "it looks like I'm going to need some young bones in this business. My old ones are about worn out. Come along out with me and I'll tell the boys you're here. You better hang around and watch the process for a few days, ask questions, and get underfoot. You can't work in a pulp mill unless you know what it's all about. Oh, yes—this is Lucy Fields, Mr. Wills. I run the mill and Lucy runs me."

Lucy looked up and said, "How do you do?" swallowing nervously.

"I shall probably have to ask Miss Fields to boss me for a while," he said. "I'll be a sad tenderfoot, I'm afraid."

"I'll boss you," Virgie stated firmly, "and this plant can't afford tenderfeet. You have to cut your eye-teeth quick and cut them hard. Begin by stepping high over that steam hose if you don't want Jerry Shelton in your hair."

There was, to Virgie's eyes, only the customary reticence of the mountain man in the attitude of the old hands in the mill toward Branford Wills. They greeted him with the taciturn "Howdy" of the hills, looked him up and down, went on with their work.

"You show Wills how the drum-barkers work, Mank," Virgie ordered. "Start him in with the logs at this end and he'll come out with the pulp into the stuff chests, at the other."

But if she was satisfied with the calm of events at the mill, she was displeased when she went home at night, very weary.

The rain had stopped. The ground was freezing again and the wind

"When I elope it will be by moonlight, and the man will be lean and handsome."

was friendless and dreary. Lössie had not lighted the fire and the room that Virgie persisted in calling the "sitting-room" was cold.

The upper floor still smelled of camphor and alcohol and Ada Clark's starched, scorched uniforms. But it was very still. Lössie had cleaned up the sick-room and put a clean counterpane on the bed, very flat and white. It looked lonely.

Marian's room was empty, too, and Virgie felt irritated at that. You spent your best years raising young ones, you gave them the best of everything and all the freedom in the world. You were a good parent and what did you get? A cold house, empty and forlorn, nobody to talk to, nobody to give a darn if you dropped over from weariness or got pleurisy from dressing in a cold room.

Even in her own mind Virgie was only half aware of the real cause of her irritation, the pressing apprehension half ignored, which was her anxiety about Tom Pruitt.

She sat and stared gloomily into the fire, wondering what had happened to the old man and what he meant by wandering off, anyway, without a word to any one—the old mule-head! Sat, all unaware of the drama that had been enacted that day, on the cold slope of the ridge above Hazel Fork, a drama with only one witness. That witness was young Bill Gallup.

Bill Gallup had been driving the maintenance truck along a rutty mountain road.

The road followed the slash ribbon over the slope of a ridge where the steel towers and wires of a main transmission line linked up the eager plunge of mountain torrents with the deeper surge of the commerce of the world.

Through the low growing brush of the slash he saw a tall figure approaching—a man who carried a gun.

He slowed the truck and waited. Mountain men were sensitive for all their harsh exteriors and to pass on without stopping to pass the time of day might give offense that could bring down on a power concern the vindictive and sadistic enmity of a whole family connection.

Bill called, "Howdy, neighbor," and trod the brake. The engine instantly sighed, gurgled, steamed, and died. The man with the gun came nearer and Bill saw that it was old Tom Pruitt.

"Hello, Tom," he greeted. "What are you fixing to hunt up here, this time of year? That looks like a bear gun to me."

"Yeah," he said, "this here's a bear gun. I been toting it round over the ridge yonder. Thought I might maybe could see me a varmint. I was just shacking down to get me a bite to eat. You goin' back to that there lighthouse of yours? I'll ride along and see if Jim Bishop's wife has got a cold pone in the stove."

"Sure, get in. You must have been out quite a while—you're pretty muddy and tired out, from the look of you."

"Slept out," Tom was laconic.

At the Bishop house Tom got out and went around to the back door. Jim Bishop's wife was a girl from the village and Bill remembered that he had heard she was distantly related to Tom. Any kinship, to the most remote degree, was important to the plant, confident that Tom would be taken care of.

An hour later, as he went back to work after lunch, he saw Tom Pruitt again. Gun slung over his shoulder, Tom was slogging down the muddy road. His shoulders were slumped and his legs moved heavily as though he were very weary.

Tom turned off the road presently and struck directly across the ridge, following a dim trail through the crowding laurel. The path was steep and tangled, having been made by game. It crept beneath tall, knotty thickets of rhododendron, and skirted open places, keeping to the shelter of the undergrowth. It had been trodden out by creatures wishing to hide, and it suited Tom, for he had no desire to be seen.

Twice he rested, crouched on rocks, stretching his legs, his ears buzzing as his heart strained in the thin air. On the upward climb he did not bother to look about him, but toiled on, stooping, the gun heavy under his arm, his head down.

But once on the crest his manner changed, turned feral, cautious, his eyes glinting. He stalked silently, his old hat jerked down, the pocket of his overall jacket sagging from a double weight of cartridges.

The opposite slope of the ridge was very different from the brushy way he had just climbed. Ahead, as far as his eye could carry, was a great, untouched, majestic expanse of hardwood forest. Trees, vast and quiet, leafless and magnificent, in their aloof columnar austerity, covered the slow descent and a rolling expanse below.

Tom breathed heavily, air whistling through his teeth as he looked at them. His eyes, for a moment, were worshipful.

Taking a downward roundabout way, he advanced from tree to tree, carefully finding the moss underfoot, making no sound. A bunch of wild gooseberry bushes offered ambush and he dropped into them, parting the twigs soundlessly, lying still for a long interval, his gaze fixed on the slope below.

There was an indentation in the half-frozen ground and into this his elbow fitted easily, because in that place for two days it had rested.

The ground was cold and Tom's body ached after a half-hour in the cramped place, but he shifted his limbs, flexed his hands, and shrugged his collar up about his neck, always keeping his eyes on a spot far below between the tall poplars.

The light grew cold and thin, the trees stirred and worried as trees do when night begins to climb the mountains. A dry twig fell, a crossbill swung across a lighter space, stopped for an instant on the bark of a cedar, turned head down, and began its angry cry. All the frost-powdered drift of leaves stirred briefly, in a raw breath of wind, then was as swiftly still.

Old Tom tensed a little. For forty years he had been a woodsman. He knew all the signs. Something was abroad in this quiet winter forest. He had waited two days and a night and now his waiting was at an end.

He pulled himself up slightly, dropped his hat and rested his left arm upon it. The gun came up and was steady. The cool palm-worm stock and breech were smooth under the old man's hand. Its weight gave him the feeling of power and dominance that belongs only to kings. For a long interval he made no move.

Then in a flash the crossbill hurled itself to the top of the tree, screaming. Bark sifted down. And far down the slope Tom Pruitt saw what he had been watching for for forty long hours.

A car had stopped on the woods road. Two men got out and walked up the rutty track and presently a third man followed. Tom was troubled at that. He had not counted on a third man. But he lay motionless, watching.

The three began climbing the slope, stopping at intervals to study the trees. One was obviously the conductor of the expedition, making gestures, calling the attention of the others to the lifting majesty of the trunks, the spread of branches. Tom Pruitt followed this man with a narrowed eye, precise and remorseless, over the sight of the resting rifle.

They came closer. The leader moved ahead, turning back at intervals to direct the gaze of the others upon the lay of the land, the absence of underbrush, the ease with which this virgin stand could be timbered. As though he heard every word Tom Pruitt knew what this man was saying, though their voices reached him only as low murmurs through the forest stillness.

High in the tree the crossbill was agitated. Men born to the woods, Tom thought with scorn, would have known enough to look around, known that something watched below the crossbill's tree. But these men did not belong in places of watchful silences. They were outlanders. They had come to rob. And because they had no craft they were helpless.

Very slowly Tom's long forearm flexed, very slowly the muscles of his lean hand—his right hand—tightened!

The drama came home to Virgie Morgan at ten o'clock, when her ears had begun to ache from listening for Marian's return, and wild angers at the stark thoughtlessness of young people to possess her.

She heard a car stop, and sprang to her feet, grim-faced and reproachful.

"Well—did they close up all the other places?" She began sharply. But she stopped at the sight of Marian's white face. Marian's eyes were big and frightened.

"Mother—" she began—"Bry and I went to Sally Gallup's this afternoon when it stopped raining. On the way back we picked up Tom Pruitt. He's been up there—in the woods—for days. He's out in the car now—he's all muddy. Mother—Tom killed a man—over on Hazel Fork."

The sound Virgie Morgan made at Marian's announcement was half a groan and half a convulsive, absurd squeak. There was horror in it, but under that a terrible tragic resignation.

Somehow, for days, for weeks even, she had felt the pressure of this coming thing. The unrest and unhappy nerve twitchings of impending

"They was in my timber, Mis' Morgan. I was watchin' for 'em. I got one."

change. She had decided in the morning, in spite of the apparent calm at the mill, that now her forebodings had come true—that something was beginning in the ruthless, inexplicable fashion with which life suddenly shifts to the sinister.

But even her stout spirit was not braced against such a fierce acceleration of tempo.

She stumbled up, gray-faced. "Where is he?" she demanded. "How do you know he killed a man? Killed who?"

Marian was steady, though her eyes were big and terrified.

"He doesn't know who it was, Mother. He shot somebody. They were trying to steal his timber over on Hazel Creek. Now he wants us to take him over to jail. Bry and I don't know what to do. Bry thinks Tom is crazy."

Lössie was standing, staring blankly at the door.

"Get my coat," Virgie ordered. "I'll talk to Tom. We're not in a big enough mess—he would have to do a thing like this!"

Marian protested. "It's no use to talk to him, Mother. He's so excited when he tries to talk it doesn't make sense and his teeth chatter. Bry doesn't want to drive way over to the county-seat tonight. Couldn't we telephone the sheriff?"

"We won't telephone anybody. I'll handle this. Bring Tom in here. He didn't kill anybody. Tell Bry to bring him in."

"I don't believe he'll come in. He didn't want us to stop at all. He said if we wouldn't take him to jail that he'd get out and walk."

"Give me that coat, Lössie. I'll fetch the old fool in here myself." Virgie fumbled into the sleeves. She was a strong woman but now she felt numb all over and her knees were fluid and cold. She walked out into the winter dark, holding her jaw grimly to keep her teeth from clacking. "What's all this, Tom Pruitt?" she demanded, as she came up to the silent car, standing there in the dark with headlights burning dimly. "What's all this foolishness?"

Tom seemed to heave himself up with an effort. His long, gaunt body straightened, in the shadows. His breath hissed over his teeth.

"They was in my timber, Mis' Morgan. I was watchin' for 'em. I got one. I'd ought to get them all. I would 'a got all of 'em but my old gun jammed. It hadn't ought to jammed, neither—I had it cleaned out good. Them cartridges Bryson sold me wasn't no good."

JESUS AND HUMAN AFFLICTIONS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 13:1-5, 10-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—We have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities.—Hebrews 4:15.

A sense of guilt for sin seems to be in every human heart. Some deny it, or seek to suppress it, but it has a way of revealing itself, especially when trouble or sorrow comes. How often one hears even persons who are spiritually indifferent and careless say that some catastrophe is a punishment for sin. The assumption is that the one who suffers much is a great sinner, but our study of Job taught us that such is not necessarily the case. In our lesson for today we learn from Jesus Himself regarding human affliction. His attitude toward it should guide us in our attitude. First of all He makes clear that we are all

I. Perishing Sinners (vv. 1-5).

Someone, apparently a Judean, told Jesus, possibly with a sense of real pious satisfaction, that certain Galileans (whom the Judeans did not like) had been slain while they were at worship. Evidently the implication was, "What terrible sinners they must have been!" How like that are the expressions of people today!

Jesus met the question by giving another similar incident right in Judea, thus rebuking false racial pride; then went on to point out that what they (and we) need to remember is that all men are sinners and will perish eternally unless they repent. "A man can perish though Pilate never slay him. He can perish though no tower crush him. He may die in his bed, with his friends all about him; and even have music when he dies, but he will be damned unless he repent" (G. Campbell Morgan).

The important thing is not the relative sinfulness of men, but the fact that God "commands all men everywhere to repent" (Acts 17:30). We are all sinners, either saved by grace or eternally lost. Sinner, turn to the

II. Powerful Saviour (vv. 10-13).

Here was a woman, spiritually alert, but physically afflicted. She was in the synagogue (vv. 10, 11), and she was a daughter of Abraham, indicating that she was a woman of faith. But for some reason, which is not revealed, an evil spirit of Satan (v. 16) had brought about in her body an illness which bent her double. We cannot "explain this. There may be many other such cases in the world. There are things we have not fathomed yet concerning the mystery of suffering and the power of evil" (Morgan).

We see the facts, but, thank God, we see more, for we find her meeting the all-powerful Saviour, who is able and willing to deliver. Jesus saw her. He called her to Him. He spoke to her. He touched her, and He healed her. What a blessed experience. Have you been to Jesus with your need? If not, why not come right now?

Observe that He had power and authority to set the woman free from Satan who had held her bound for 18 long years.

One would suppose that all would have rejoiced at this glorious deliverance, but we find that the ruler of the synagogue was angry. He viewed what he regarded as the breaking of the Sabbath day with alarm and

III. Perverted Solicitude (vv. 14-17).

It is a splendid thing to be concerned about good order, proper procedure and decorum, especially in the house of God. But when there is a human need and the Son of God meets that need by the working of His power, it is both folly and hypocrisy to obstruct or become angry because one's own interpretation of the proper order of things has been set aside.

This man, who as a religious leader should have realized that the need of humanity came above his consideration for the beast of the field (vv. 15, 16), and who should have rejoiced that the Son of God had done this miracle in the synagogue, rightly deserved the swift and stinging rebuke of Jesus. His objection was not really to the violation of the Sabbath, but to the working of God. Such men need rebuke.

One marvels that the church can read this passage again and again and never learn the lesson. One of the blights on the church today is the unwillingness of many of its leaders to permit the power of God to work. They don't want it. It upsets their plans and programs. If such a man (or woman) reads these lines, it is suggested that he read the eighth and ninth words of verse 15, then verse 5.

May God help us to fairly meet such an important issue honestly, and for the benefit of our eternal souls.

Made Rather Bad Guess In Dark of the Night

Podkins had been walking about all day looking for lodgings. When darkness came he was still searching. At last he noticed a card in a window.

"Good evening," he said to the woman who appeared at the door in answer to his knock. "I'm here in reference to the card in your window."

"Oh, yes! How many might you want, sir?"

"Only one. You see, I've had a row with my landlady."

"But you're not going to pelt her with it, are you, sir?"

"Pelt her with a room?"

"Room? I've got no rooms. That card reads 'New-Laid Eggs.'"

Outlook for 1941
Better Than 1940
Says John Clay Co.

Livestock prices are going into the New Year on a substantially higher basis than prevailed at the corresponding period of 1940, according to the John Clay & Co., Live Stock Commission Service.

The prevailing average cost of killing steers is 23 per cent better than a year ago; hogs, 22 per cent up, with lambs showing an elevation of eight per cent.

Slaughter steers are selling on the highest basis in three years, hogs best since September and lambs unequaled since August. Quotations moved up during the past month without the aid of foreign demand and despite the growing influence of poultry on the situation.

The kill under federal inspection in December registered increases in all grades compared with a year earlier which, ordinarily, would work against improved rates. Cattle slaughter was stepped up 14 per cent. Hogs, 20 per cent; lambs, a slight gain. The year's slaughter recorded increases also, cattle being largest in three years, hogs most since 1928 and lambs greatest since 1937.

Export of pork and lard fell far short of 1939, decreases being as follows: Pork, 20 per cent; lard, 30 per cent. Beef exports gained slightly. On the other hand, importations dropped sharply, beef and veal being off 30 per cent, while pork dwindled to a mere 10 per cent of the previous year's in shipments.

Home Bureau To Organize In Cook
County Jan. 16

"The Cook County Home Bureau, which has been in the process of organization for two years," states Farm Adviser C. A. Hughes, "will be organized January 16 probably at LaGrange. So far there are about 325 members and between now and that time it is expected to sign up the remaining 25 or more members." All of those who signed before organization will be considered as charter members of the Home Bureau.

Mrs. Helen Taylor Butner who has assisted in the organization of the Home Bureau is setting up the various committees for organization. The Home Bureau will probably maintain one office in the Farm Bureau at Blue Island and another in the post office at DesPlaines. It will be the business of the newly organized Home Bureau to form a board and set up working units in the county. The board will have the responsibility of the employment of a home adviser.

The work of a Home Bureau is somewhat different than that of a Farm Bureau in that they do not engage in commercial services but their work is largely educational and informational. There will probably be about fourteen units organized in the county. These units will have monthly meetings with the exception of one or two of the summer months. In the monthly meeting one of the lessons that has been outlined by the University on many home making tasks will be used. These lessons involve many subjects that have to do with a home maker's work. It may be health, kitchen planning, nutrition, textiles and fabrics, budgets, the arrangement of furniture, refinishing of furniture, and a number of other subjects.

In many of the Home Bureau organizations there are a sizeable number of townswomen belonging. This question has been asked numerous times in Cook County. Any townswomen who are interested in knowing more about home making are eligible for Home Bureau membership. It is expected that the Home Bureau will be organized and ready to begin its monthly meetings by the first of February.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Christian Science" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, December 29.

The Golden Text was, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened" (Matthew 13:33).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit. Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise" (Jeremiah 17:7, 8, 14).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Whoever would demonstrate the healing of Christian Science must abide strictly by its rules, heed every statement, and advance from the rudiments laid down. There is nothing difficult nor toilsome in this task, when the way is pointed out; but self-denial, sincerity, Christianity, and persistence alone win the prize, as they usually do in every department of life" (p. 462).

*May Your Light
Be Never Extinguished*

GODDESS of Liberty, may your torch never be extinguished. For us you represent everything America was, is and hopes to be. Your arms have embraced millions of the persecuted and enslaved . . . given them new hope and courage . . . and sent them forth into America, the land where every man is architect of his own fortune. Goddess, what you have sown, you also shall reap. The hope you have instilled, the courage you have fired, the opportunity to live like a creature of God you so unselfishly and unaskingly have given, will now be forged by each and every one of your grateful children into a mighty and irresistible force against which those who now stalk the world can never prevail.

Your land, our land, will forever be a beautiful and bountiful garden in which shall always bloom the flowers of free speech, free assembly, free religious worship and a free press — and where man, God's handiwork, may continue to walk unafraid. We are proud to be part of the first line of defense of American liberties . . . to always stand militantly at the side of every true American against the inroads of doctrines seeking to destroy America's priceless heritage.

By Eleanor Howe

OF COURSE YOU LIKE CANDY
(See Recipes Below)

Making candy is really outside the realm of general cooking, but with a little guidance, even an amateur can work real magic with sugar and water. Simply by changing temperature and the method of handling, a wide variety of fondants, fudges, and hard candies can be made.

Utensils for Making Candy.

Saucepans should have broad bottoms, and should be large enough to allow for "boiling up." The inside surface should be smooth, because rough spots may cause candies to stick and burn.

Measuring cups—use standard measuring cups for successful results; accurate measurements are essential.

Spoons and spatulas—wooden spoons are desirable for candy making because they do not become uncomfortably hot, nor does the wooden spoon handle cut into one's hand during beating. Use standard table-spoons and teaspoons for measuring. A medium-sized spatula is a help in scraping candy from kettles, and lifting candy from the pan.

Baking sheets, platters and pans—ordinary cookie sheets provide a good surface for pouring hard candies; large platters may be used for taffy, which is to be taken out and pulled, or for fondant which is to be beaten. A marble slab from an old-fashioned marble-topped table or bureau makes an excellent smooth, level surface for pouring candies.

Candy thermometer—a thermometer is essential in order to obtain uniform and good results in making candy.

Candies are classified as "creamy candies," such as fondant or fudge, and as "taffies" and "hard" candies, like nut brittle and lollipops.

In making creamy candies two rules must be observed: cook the candy to a definite temperature, and cool to room temperature before you begin to beat.

Brazilian Molasses Balls.

(Makes 24 small balls)
1½ cups sugar
¾ cup hot water
¾ cup light molasses
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon vinegar
¾ cup butter
3 pints popped corn
1 pint Brazil nuts (sliced)

Dissolve sugar in hot water. Add molasses, salt and vinegar and cook to soft crack stage (270 degrees). Remove from heat, and add butter. Stir syrup slowly into popped corn and Brazil nuts. Mix well, and shape into balls.

Lollipops.

(Makes 1½ dozen)

2 cups sugar
¾ cup light corn syrup
1 cup water
½ teaspoon oil of cloves or oil of cinnamon
Red or green coloring

Put sugar, syrup, and water in a saucepan. Cook, stirring just until the sugar is dissolved. Continue cooking over very low heat, to 310 degrees on a candy thermometer. Wash down the crystals that form during cooking, using cheese cloth which has been wrapped around a fork or spoon.

When the candy reaches 310 degrees, remove from heat, add coloring and coloring and mix very quickly. Pour into small buttered muffin pans, filling them only ¾-inch deep. As soon as the lollipops begin to set (which will take only a few minutes) loosen them from sides of pan and turn out on table top. Insert the pointed end of a small skewer into the side of each lollipop, working it in carefully to avoid breaking the candy. It will be necessary to work quickly.

Milk Chocolate Marshmallow Candy
½ pound broken milk chocolate
1 1-ounce square bitter chocolate
½ cup walnut meats (broken)
8 marshmallows, (cut in halves)
Melt milk chocolate and bitter chocolate together in the top of a double boiler. Remove from flame and add walnut meats and marshmallows. Stir gently until thoroughly mixed. Drop by teaspoonfuls on wax paper. Serve when cool.

Taffy Apples.

Place a meat skewer in end of each apple. Cook together 1 cup sugar, 1 cup white corn syrup, ¼ cup butter, and 1 cup coffee cream until mixture reaches firm ball stage (246 degrees). Stir carefully to avoid scorching. Remove from flame and dip each apple into mixture and then in cold water.

Butterscotch Nut Marshmallows.

1 cup light brown sugar
½ cup cream
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
¼ teaspoon salt
½ pound marshmallows
¾ cup nut meats (finely chopped)

Place brown sugar, cream, vanilla extract, and salt in a saucepan.

Cook slowly, stirring frequently, to the soft ball stage (236 degrees). Remove from flame and place saucepan over hot water to keep mixture from cooling. Coat marshmallows with the butterscotch mixture and then roll immediately in the finely chopped nut meats. Place on a buttered platter until cold.

Red and Green Popcorn Balls.

(Makes 10 balls)
2 cups sugar
2 tablespoons light corn syrup
1½ cups water
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
Red or green liquid coloring
3 quarts popped corn

Combine sugar, corn syrup and water, and cook in a saucepan, stirring until the sugar is dissolved. Continue cooking until the temperature 290 degrees is reached, or until a few drops of the syrup becomes brittle when dropped into cold water. Add vanilla extract and a few drops of red or green coloring. Stir sufficiently to mix the coloring evenly. Pour the cooked syrup over the popped corn, which has been sprinkled with salt; stir well, and form into balls with the hands, using little pressure.

Chocolate Fudge.

(Makes 36 1¼-inch squares)

2 tablespoons butter
3 cups sugar
1 cup milk
2 squares chocolate (2 ounces) (cut in pieces)
¼ cup honey
1 teaspoon vinegar
1 teaspoon vanilla
Nutmeats if desired

Melt butter in a saucepan. Add sugar and milk, and mix well. Bring to a boil, then cover and cook with the lid on for about 3 minutes. Remove lid, add chocolate and honey, and cook to soft ball stage (236 degrees). Remove from heat, and add vinegar and vanilla. Cool to room temperature, and beat until the fudge is thick and creamy. Add nutmeats if desired, and spread in well buttered pan.

A cup of grated cheese added to the white sauce that is served with cauliflower is very good.

CELESTE'S WHINES

(Associated Newspapers.)
WNU Service.

THERE was nothing new about Celeste's whining. All of her twenty years she had merely to whine and the whole family hastened to adjust things to suit her fancy. Although her sister was only two years older, Virginia had been made to give up to Celeste from the time she was a baby. Neither the parents nor Virginia realized how completely Celeste had come to dictate their lives.

Just now Celeste was demanding a new dress. It little mattered to her that she had had two new dresses since Virginia had any. Virginia sighed and handed over the money she had been saving for a trip. There was more resentment in her heart than she had ever been conscious of before, but her mother's caressing little pat assured her that she had done the right thing.

"You know, she'll be young only once," the mother consoled, and seemed not to think that Virginia might enjoy being young once, too.

In a few hours Celeste returned from her shopping trip in a jubilant mood.

"Just as I guessed. I have a perfectly gorgeous dress and now I have something to wear."

On and on she talked of the man who has "everything."

"Who is he?" Virginia asked half-heartedly.

"You'd never guess in a hundred years. He's just inherited $100,000 and only think what a wonderful chance for me, mumsey," she rejoiced.

Her mother agreed with her and they sat planning how Celeste must be given every help in the family's power that she might be sure to make the proper impression.

"Now, Virginia, since this wonder man is coming this afternoon, won't you do your best with the lunch? Some of your delicious marshmallow cocoa with chicken salad and some of those new sandwiches like you made last night, with a relish and some nuts would be just right." The mother had swallowed hook, line and sinker, as usual, when Celeste had some new plan. And, as usual, the real work of it all fell to Virginia.

Virginia went to the kitchen and started her task with rising rebellion in her heart.

"Yes, Virginia can look on from afar and do the work," she stormed as she shredded the chicken for the salad.

Before she had finished the salad she heard Celeste talking in her best company voice, and she could imagine her sister, crisp and lovely in the new dress, entertaining her handsome friend.

"I'll have to admit that she can look charming," Virginia conceded grudgingly.

Just then she heard the swinging door from the dining room creak and looking up saw her old friend, Bill Thomas.

"How'er you, Virginia?" he beamed and grasped both her hands in a hearty grip. "Up to your old tricks! Honest, I never saw another girl that could stir up as good things to eat as you used to fix for our school picnics."

"Flatterer! Now you'll have to pay for your rashness by tasting each of these things I'm preparing and tell me if you think they are good enough to trap a hundred-thousand-dollar husband for Celeste."

"What's this?" Bill paused midway in his sampling.

"That's what I said. I don't know who he may be, but it certainly has laid us all out to get her gown and fed properly."

"Lucky I didn't stay in there and queer her chance. Now I'll slip off my coat and help you here, as we used to when we were in high school. What do you say, Virgie?"

Virginia flushed with pleasure at her old nickname and found herself confiding that everything there was Celeste's, without really meaning to do it. With each glance at Virginia, Bill seemed to wear a more satisfied expression.

"You haven't told me this new man's name?"

"Sorry, but Celeste wouldn't even tell me," Virginia confided.

Bill gave a low whistle and went on helping.

Finally things were ready and they both prepared to serve the lunch. Virginia served the plates in a most tempting way while Bill filled the cocoa cups.

"I've served enough plates for us all to have some. Of course, we'll eat alone so we won't spoil the family impression," Virginia laughed.

"Well, something tells me that we won't need all those plates," Bill volunteered.

"What, you don't imagine for one minute that this mysterious gentleman has failed to appear?"

"Oh, no, no," Bill consoled immediately.

Sure enough, as Virginia appeared with the luncheon she was met by the astonishing sight of Celeste sitting sedately in a large chair, beautiful in her new dress, but accusingly silent and moody toward her sister. Virginia, entirely innocent of her sister's plot that had failed, laughed happily.

"Bill just happened in to help me, Celeste. But where is the wonderful man?"

Celeste gave one frantic look at her sister and Bill, the look of a trapped animal, then fled upstairs to fling herself on the bed and cry bitter, stormy tears, unmindful of the damage done the lovely new dress.

Virginia gasped in amazement and turned to Bill.

"Well, looks as if I'd failed to play up to my part in Celeste's expectations," he said as they sat down at table together. "But didn't she tell you I was planning to come up this afternoon, and didn't you know that Uncle William had just left me $100,000? You don't have to answer, for I can see you didn't."

"Bill, you don't mean—" Virginia was speechless.

"I do mean that Celeste deliberately took your best at home and then tried to fix things so you'd never see me. I'd like to see the person that could keep me away from you, Virginia, if you really want me near you," he added tenderly.

"Bill, I'm so sorry for silly little Celeste," Virginia whispered happily.

The Homecoming

By ALLISON L. BURKS
(McClure Syndicate—WNU service.)

LOOKING out the train window, Laura could see the two old people who stood on the platform. In the dim glow of the station light they looked unchanged, exactly as they had when she felt them six years ago.

She lifted the child in her arms before she went down the steps of the car. "Laura!" All the way from California there had been a weight in Laura's breast. Now, as her mother's arms closed about her, she felt the weight miraculously dissolving.

Her father took the little girl from her arms. "So this is the baby!" His voice sounded choked.

A dark figure standing behind him moved closer. Ma chuckled. "You didn't see Lew, did you, Laurie? He wanted to come with us to meet you."

"Oh, Lew!" Laura's voice was a little breathless.

The man took the slim hand she held out to him. She knew he was looking down at her intently. "I'm glad you're back, Laura," he said quietly.

"It's just the same! It's just the same!" The words were like a song in Laura's heart as they went into the living room.

Ma went upstairs with her. "I put new drapes at your windows," she told Laura. "How do you think Lew's looking? He's the only lawyer in these parts, and he's doing fine. He's never forgot you, Laurie."

"Of course, I know you must be grieving over your husband dying—I wish we could know him, Laurie—but now that you're back again—"

Laura sat down on the edge of the plump bed. The little girl came close to her side.

"Are we going to live here, Mummy?"

"Yes, darling." She caught the child to her fiercely, staring ahead with eyes that were suddenly hard.

Five years! She would have at least five years. Then she would have to go back. But the child would stay here. Ma and Pa weren't really old. They would be glad to have the baby when she, Laura, was gone. For a moment she felt the pain that parting would bring. Then she set her lips resolutely. She would have her five years in Heaven. Years ago, before she went away, she hadn't known it was Heaven. But Jack had taught her what Hell could be.

Of course, she could have divorced him. But it wouldn't have done any good. Jack would never let her go. Sometimes he loved her; more often he hated her. But he'd never let go of her.

She washed the little girl's round face and chubby hands before they went downstairs.

Lew came into the dining-room when he saw her there setting the table. "I hope you were just a little glad to see me, Laura," he said awkwardly.

"Why, of course, Lew." She didn't look at him.

"You don't care if I come out here sometimes?"

"The sugar bowl's empty," she murmured. She went toward the kitchen. She'd better tell him. She mustn't hurt him—not again!

Ma was at the kitchen sink, unwrapping a newspaper from around a bunch of celery. She paused, her eyes caught by an item in the printed columns.

"Here's a funny thing," she said absently. "About a man named John Brown. The same name as your man, Laura. In Los Angeles—Oh, well, I guess there's a lot of John Browns in the world."

She went across the kitchen to the pantry. Laura drew the newspaper toward her. She stood very still, reading the short item.

John Brown, sentenced to San Quentin for robbery, was shot and killed while attempting to escape.

Lew had followed Laura into the kitchen. "You didn't answer me, Laura," he reminded her.

She turned to him. Her voice was suddenly alive, vibrant. "Why, Lew," she said. "I want you to come. I'll always want you to come!"

And, her hands against her face, she began to cry.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

IT WAS a bride of ten years who reminded me of blanket protectors. I say bride because her home still has the immaculate freshness of a bride's house. Her wool blankets have never been washed or cleaned, yet their soft light colorings show no sign of soil. She brought out some long pieces of cotton material; "I baste these over the tops of the blankets," she said "and change them every few weeks."

I thought of some dainty bed linens that I had seen all trimmed in flower sprigged cotton print. Why not make flowered blanket protectors to harmonize with blanket colorings? Here is one that would go with either rose or blue. It is easy to hide basting stitches that fasten it temporarily to the blanket by slipping them along in the pink or blue binding as shown. One length of material as long as the width of the blanket will make a pair of these protectors. A half yard extra of the flowered material will face a matching pair of pillow cases.

You will also find some other ideas for trimming pillow cases in SEWING Book 2. This booklet has been one of the most popular in the series as it not only contains complete directions for many gift and bazaar novelties but shows how to make 42 different embroidery stitches and five ways to darn and repair fabrics. "I," he said, "excuse my knife—Am champion of the broader life; I," he said, "excuse my gun—Am just a little ray of sun."

"You," I said, and raised my hand, "I find quite hard to understand; How can you be my guiding light While slugging me with left and right?"

"I am," he said, "a leader kind—Excuse my wallops from behind—The things I do are for the best—Excuse my fist; it's just a test!"

"Your logic isn't overclear," I said (then landed on my ear); "It's hard to think you such a lamb When underneath your feet I am."

"I am," he said, "a leader kind—If you can't see it you are blind; I want this world a sweeter place—Excuse it if I bash your face!"

"I somehow fail to follow you," I said, now very black and blue; "How can I see you as my hope? You're standing on my chin, you dope."

"You are," he said, "so very dense, It always gives me great offense; If I but run you up a tree You question if it's best for thee."

"It isn't very clear," I said, "When you have knocked me nearly dead, That every new atrocity Is done to make it nice for me."

LO, THE POOR INDIAN!

On the Tonawanda Seneca reservation in New York, the United States government made its 146th annual presentation of six yards of calico to each Indian in the Iroquois Confederation Saturday, keeping a treaty of 1794. A speaker glowingly reminded the Indians (and the assembled newsreel men and camera men) that the United States was keeping a faith which was "unique in a world of broken promises and enslaved people."

Well, we get the idea, and it is okay with us, but the Red Man was certainly entitled to a loud guffaw and nine giggles.

It was old Peter Doctor, oldest of the Senecas, who got his point over. "The Indians were civilized with a veneer of savagery," he said, taking his calico and wondering what to do with the darned stuff. "Over there white men have turned to savagery with a veneer of civilization."
